Modern Farming Methods

Modern farming methods are helping farmers in this area who are using Farmers Home Administration credit to increase their income, the agency's county supervisor, Hunter P. Evans, said today.

Soil and water Conservation loan is one type of assistance offered by the Farmers Home Administration. Loan funds may be used to pay for making improvements directly related to soil conservation. This includes improvements such as basic application of lime and fertilizer, irrigation, fencing, and pasture improvement.

Soil and water Conservation loans can be repayable up to twenty years. Loans to individuals can not exceed $25,000.

Evans said maxium returns can not be obtained from farming unless good soil and water conservation practices are followed. More information on this and other types of loans available through the Farmers Home Administration can be obtained at the FHA office at Farmville.
